The Federal Government should improve the operation of the Skilling Australia Fund Levy by:

- Aligning the use of the Skilling Australia Fund Levy to training initiatives that alleviate the skill shortages driving skilled migration.
- Changing the point of levy collection from the visa nomination stage to the visa approval stage so that employers do not incur the levy if a visa nomination is refused.

The Federal Government should immediately introduce a dedicated, streamlined path for intra-company transfers of employees to Australia.

The Federal Government should remove the requirement for labour market testing once the skills shortage list process has been strengthened.

The Federal Government should strengthen identification of skill shortages and eligible occupations for skilled visas in the skilled occupation list to increase confidence in the process by:

- Being more transparent about the data and methods used in assessing whether occupations are included on skilled occupation lists.
- Immediately reviewing the Australian and New Zealand Standard Classification of Occupations (ANZSCO) codes to ensure they align with current and emerging labour trends, particularly the impact of technology.
- Establishing an independent committee, like the Migration Advisory Committee in the UK, to undertake analysis, consultation and advice on the formulation of skilled occupation lists.

The Federal Treasurer should task the Productivity Commission with undertaking a review of the Temporary Skill Shortage visa program every three to five years to guide future changes to policy settings.
There are almost two million temporary migrants in Australia. Migration remains central to Australia’s economic prosperity and delivers benefits – permanent and temporary – for the broader community. Yet concerns around migration levels, as a driver of population growth, have again become a hot topic.

CEDA’s report examines the facts around temporary migration, its importance to business and the economic benefits it delivers to the broader community. While less often discussed than permanent migration, it is a significant and important part of Australia’s migration system.

CEDA’s analysis shows that contrary to some concerns, recent waves of migrants have not had an adverse impact on the wages or jobs of local workers. Australia’s temporary skilled migration scheme has faced significant scrutiny and has been subject to constant change and review. This creates significant uncertainty, undermining the benefits of this important program to business and the wider economy. Reflecting this, CEDA’s recommendations in this report focus on improving the temporary skilled migration process in four key areas:

• Improving the process of identifying eligible occupations for temporary skilled migration through publication of data and methods, and better classification of occupations.
• Embedding stability of the scheme through more structured and independent evaluation at set intervals.
• Realising administrative efficiencies, including for intracompany transfers of employees and labour market testing.
• Aligning the use of the Skilling Australians Fund Levy to identified areas of emerging skills shortages, to ensure training initiatives alleviate skill shortages driving skilled migration.

Australia will continue to need temporary skilled migration to fill skill shortages as labour demands change and industries continue to evolve. Improving predictability of the scheme and increasing understanding of the benefits will help reduce the scheme’s exposure to politicking and ensure important economic benefits for the economy and Australians more broadly, are realised. This report aims to move us closer to those goals.

Overview

There are almost two million temporary migrants in Australia. Migration remains central to Australia’s economic prosperity and delivers benefits – permanent and temporary – for the broader community. Yet concerns around migration levels, as a driver of population growth, have again become a hot topic.

CEDA’s report examines the facts around temporary migration, its importance to business and the economic benefits it delivers to the broader community. While less often discussed than permanent migration, it is a significant and important part of Australia’s migration system.

CEDA’s analysis shows that contrary to some concerns, recent waves of migrants have not had an adverse impact on the wages or jobs of local workers. Australia’s temporary skilled migration scheme has faced significant scrutiny and has been subject to constant change and review. This creates significant uncertainty, undermining the benefits of this important program to business and the wider economy. Reflecting this, CEDA’s recommendations in this report focus on improving the temporary skilled migration process in four key areas:

• Improving the process of identifying eligible occupations for temporary skilled migration through publication of data and methods, and better classification of occupations.
• Embedding stability of the scheme through more structured and independent evaluation at set intervals.
• Realising administrative efficiencies, including for intracompany transfers of employees and labour market testing.
• Aligning the use of the Skilling Australians Fund Levy to identified areas of emerging skills shortages, to ensure training initiatives alleviate skill shortages driving skilled migration.

Australia will continue to need temporary skilled migration to fill skill shortages as labour demands change and industries continue to evolve. Improving predictability of the scheme and increasing understanding of the benefits will help reduce the scheme’s exposure to politicking and ensure important economic benefits for the economy and Australians more broadly, are realised. This report aims to move us closer to those goals.
The Federal Government should improve the operation of the Skilling Australia Fund Levy by:
- Aligning the use of the Skilling Australia Fund Levy to training initiatives that alleviate the skill shortages driving skilled migration.
- Changing the point of levy collection from the visa nomination stage to the visa approval stage so that employers do not incur the levy if a visa nomination is refused.

The Federal Government should immediately introduce a dedicated, streamlined path for intra-company transfers of employees to Australia.

The Federal Government should remove the requirement for labour market testing once the skills shortage list process has been strengthened.

The Federal Government should strengthen identification of skill shortages and eligible occupations for skilled visas in the skilled occupation list to increase confidence in the process by:
- Being more transparent about the data and methods used in assessing whether occupations are included on skilled occupation lists.
- Immediately reviewing the Australian and New Zealand Standard Classification of Occupations (ANZSOC) codes to ensure they align with current and emerging labour trends, particularly the impact of technology.
- Establishing an independent committee, like the Migration Advisory Committee in the UK, to undertake analysis, consultation and advice on the formulation of skilled occupation lists.

The Federal Treasurer should task the Productivity Commission with undertaking a review of the Temporary Skill Shortage visa program every three to five years to guide future changes to policy settings.
The Federal Government should improve the operation of the Skilling Australia Fund Levy by:

- Aligning the use of the Skilling Australia Fund Levy to training initiatives that alleviate the skill shortages driving skilled migration.
- Changing the point of levy collection from the visa nomination stage to the visa approval stage so that employers do not incur the levy if a visa nomination is refused.

The Federal Government should immediately introduce a dedicated, streamlined path for intra-company transfers of employees to Australia.

The Federal Government should remove the requirement for labour market testing once the skills shortage list process has been strengthened.

The Federal Government should strengthen identification of skill shortages and eligible occupations for skilled visas in the skilled occupation list to increase confidence in the process by:

- Being more transparent about the data and methods used in assessing whether occupations are included on skilled occupation lists.
- Immediately reviewing the Australian and New Zealand Standard Classification of Occupations (ANZSCO) codes to ensure they align with current and emerging labour trends, particularly the impact of technology.
- Establishing an independent committee, like the Migration Advisory Committee in the UK, to undertake analysis, consultation and advice on the formulation of skilled occupation lists.

The Federal Treasurer should task the Productivity Commission with undertaking a review of the Temporary Skill Shortage visa program every three to five years to guide future changes to policy settings.

Recommendation #3

Recommendation #2

Recommendation #4

Recommendation #5

Approriate CEDA: The Committee for Economic Development of Australia – is an independent, not-for-profit membership organisation. We identify policy issues that matter for Australia’s future and provide solutions that deliver better economic, social and environmental outcomes for Australia. © CEDA 2019 ISBN 0 85801 332 0

Effects of temporary migration

Shaping Australia’s society and economy

CEDA research snapshot

National
Level 3
271 Spring St
Melbourne VIC 3000
GPO Box 2117
Melbourne VIC 3001
Telephone 03 9662 3544
Email info@ceda.com.au

South Australia and the Northern Territory
Level 5
2 Ebenezer Place
Adelaide SA 5000
Telephone 08 8211 7222
Email info@ceda.com.au

New South Wales and the ACT
Level 14
The John Hunter Building
9 Hunter Street
Sydney NSW 2000
GPO Box 2100
Sydney NSW 2001
Telephone 02 9299 7022
Email info@ceda.com.au

Victoria and Tasmania
Level 3
271 Spring St
Melbourne VIC 3000
GPO Box 2117
Melbourne VIC 3001
Telephone 03 9662 3544
Email info@ceda.com.au

Queensland
Level 4
252 Adelaide Street
Brisbane QLD 4000
GPO Box 2000
GPO Box 4001
Brisbane QLD 4001
Telephone 07 3229 9555
Email info@ceda.com.au

Western Australia
Level 5
185 St Georges Terrace
Perth WA 6000
PO Box 5631
St Georges Tce
Perth WA 6831
Telephone 08 9226 4799
Email info@ceda.com.au

About CEDA: The Committee for Economic Development of Australia – is an independent, not-for-profit membership organisation. We identify policy issues that matter for Australia’s future and provide solutions that deliver better economic, social and environmental outcomes for Australia. © CEDA 2019 ISBN 0 85801 332 0